Last year, around this time, the entire world went into a lockdown mode following the discovery of a deadly virus that seemed to threaten our very existence. In order to protect its citizenry from contracting the virus and preventing its spread, 'Stay at home' orders became the norm and were strictly enforced by governments across the globe. Home was seen as a safe space that would cushion us from the dangers (read: virus) that lay outside the home.

Little did we realise, then that a shadow pandemic was slowly unfolding itself within those 'supposedly safe spaces'. Cisgender women, non binary and queer persons bore the brunt of the 'stay at home diktats'. Domestic violence cases surged during the pandemic as escape routes and coping mechanisms, were severely curtailed following the lockdown. Home, as we know is most certainly not a safe space for those among the marginalized genders and the lack of support groups outside the homes following the lockdown made things worse for them.
